Our journey begins in the East, with the lush landscapes of the Hudson River Valley. The Hudson River School was a group of American landscape painters who were active in the mid-19th century. These painters were known for their idealized views of the American wilderness, and their work helped to shape the way that Americans view their country. Some of the most famous Hudson River School painters include Thomas Cole, Frederic Edwin Church, and Albert Bierstadt.

As we move west, we come to the Great Plains. The Great Plains are a vast expanse of grasslands that stretch from the Rocky Mountains to the Mississippi River. These landscapes have been captured by artists such as George Catlin, Karl Bodmer, and Alfred Jacob Miller. These artists depicted the Great Plains as a land of both beauty and danger, and their work helped to document the westward expansion of the United States.

The Rocky Mountains are one of the most iconic landscapes in America. These mountains have inspired countless artists, including Albert Bierstadt, Thomas Moran, and Ansel Adams. These artists have captured the grandeur and beauty of the Rocky Mountains, and their work has helped to make these mountains one of the most popular tourist destinations in the world.

The American Southwest is home to some of the most unique and beautiful landscapes in the country. These landscapes have been captured by artists such as Georgia O'Keeffe, Maynard Dixon, and Agnes Pelton. These artists have depicted the Southwest as a land of mystery and beauty, and their work has helped to make the region a popular destination for artists and tourists alike.

The Pacific Coast is home to some of the most dramatic and beautiful landscapes in America. These landscapes have been captured by artists such as Albert Bierstadt, Thomas Moran, and Winslow Homer. These artists have depicted the Pacific Coast as a land of both beauty and danger, and their work has helped to make this region one of the most popular tourist destinations in the world.
