Faythe Levine's Sign Painters is a stunning tribute to this dying art form. Through her photographs and interviews, Levine introduces us to the men and women who keep this tradition alive.

These sign painters are artists in the truest sense of the word. They use their brushes and paint to create works of art that are both beautiful and functional. Their signs advertise businesses, announce events, and share messages of hope and inspiration.

Levine's photographs capture the beauty of these signs, but they also tell the stories of the people who create them. We learn about their struggles, their triumphs, and their passion for their craft.

Sign Painters is a love letter to a disappearing art form. It is a celebration of the creativity, skill, and passion of the men and women who keep this tradition alive.

The Art of Sign Painting

Sign painting is a complex and challenging art form. It requires a steady hand, a keen eye, and a deep understanding of color and composition.

Sign painters use a variety of brushes and paints to create their signs. They often work with large, bold letters, but they can also create intricate designs and illustrations.

The best sign painters have a natural talent for their craft. They can visualize the finished product in their minds and then use their skills to bring it to life.

The History of Sign Painting

Sign painting has a long and rich history. The first known signs were created in ancient Egypt, where they were used to advertise businesses and announce events.

In the Middle Ages, sign painting was a common trade in Europe. Sign painters were often commissioned to create signs for churches, castles, and other important buildings.

In the 19th century, sign painting became a popular art form in the United States. Sign painters were hired to create signs for businesses of all types, from small shops to large factories.

In the 20th century, the advent of digital printing led to a decline in the demand for hand-painted signs. However, there are still a number of sign painters who keep this tradition alive.

The Sign Painters of Today

The sign painters of today are a diverse group of artists. They come from all walks of life, and they have a variety of reasons for pursuing their craft.

Some sign painters are drawn to the beauty of the art form. They enjoy the challenge of creating something unique and personal.

Other sign painters are motivated by a desire to preserve a dying tradition. They believe that hand-painted signs are a valuable part of our cultural heritage.

Whatever their reasons, the sign painters of today are united by their passion for their craft. They are dedicated to keeping this tradition alive, and they are proud to share their work with the world.

Faythe Levine's Sign Painters
