

Three Goals My Peace Corps Experience in Haiti Helped Me Achieve

When I joined the Peace Corps, I was excited to make a difference in the world. I had always been interested in international development, and I saw the Peace Corps as a way to use my skills to help others. I was assigned to Haiti, a country that has faced many challenges, but also a country with a rich culture and a resilient people.

During my two years in Haiti, I set three goals for myself:

- to learn Haitian Creole
- to make a difference in the community where I lived
- to grow as a person.

I am happy to say that I achieved all three of these goals. I learned to speak Haitian Creole fluently, I helped to build a school in my community, and I grew as a person in ways that I never thought possible.

Learning Haitian Creole

When I arrived in Haiti, I knew only a few words of Haitian Creole. I was determined to learn the language, so I enrolled in a Creole class and started practicing with the people in my community. I also bought a Creole dictionary and carried it with me everywhere I went. Within a few months, I was able to communicate with the people in my community in Creole. Learning Creole was a great way to connect with the Haitian people and to learn about their culture.

Making a Difference in the Community

I was assigned to work in a rural community in the Artibonite Valley. The community was very poor, and there was no school for the children. I worked with the community to build a school, and I also taught English and math classes. The school was a great success, and it made a real difference in the lives of the children in the community. I am proud of the work that I did in Haiti, and I am grateful for the opportunity to have made a difference in the lives of the people there.

Growing as a Person

The Peace Corps experience was a transformative experience for me. I learned a great deal about myself and about the world. I learned to be more independent, resourceful, and adaptable. I also learned to appreciate the importance of community and the power of education. I am a better person today because of my Peace Corps experience, and I am grateful for the opportunity to have served in Haiti.

If you are interested in making a difference in the world, I encourage you to consider joining the Peace Corps. It is a challenging but rewarding experience, and it will change your life in ways that you never thought possible.
